Brown to Risd: "Art is for Sissies!"

By Gary Snorbert

Two Risd students attempting to cross the street on Brown University's campus were not surprised to hear a string of expletives emitting from a red sedan on Thursday afternoon. As near as they can remember it the two Risd students, whom we'll call "Chappy Chappy Olsen" and "Martin: Wind Dancer" claim the Brown students clearly shouted, "Hey boys, wanna touch my hole?" following it up with "Art is for sissies!"

Chappy Chappy and Martin were on their way to their studios and were wearing clothes containing spots of plaster, ink, gouache, and various colors of paint. Due to this messy clothing, along with Martin's hair containing a purple streak and Chappy Chappy's shirt with the correct pronunciation of "riz-dee" printed on it, the suspected Brown students were able to deduce their association with art-making. The assumption that the red sedan did in fact contain Brown University students is due to a Brown University rear window sticker and a Brown University license plate cover. The Brown students were unidentified and fled the scene once the light changed. Both Chappy Chappy and Martin: Wind Dancer claimed they

Chappy Chappy and Martin were on their way to their studios and were wearing clothes containing spots of plaster, ink, gouache, and various colors of paint. Due to this messy clothing, along with Martin's hair containing a purple streak and Chappy Chappy's shirt with the correct pronunciation of "riz-dee" printed on it, the suspected Brown students were able to deduce their association with art-making. The assumption that the red sedan did in fact contain Brown University students is due to a Brown University rear window sticker and a Brown University license plate cover. The Brown students were unidentified and fled the scene once the light changed. Both Chappy Chappy and Martin: Wind Dancer claimed they were "unaffected" and "didn't care" about the incident.

A statement released by Brown University's Office of Student Life confirmed that art is for sissies. Additional statements acknowledged by Brown include "art is for queers," which may explain this most recent incident's reference to "touch my hole." Risd also released a statement to Brown concerning this incident which contained a blank sheet of paper, a piece of string, and a small stone.
